

Guerrilla Productions Press Release

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
July 13, 2005

Zombie Love Leads to Engagement on the set of *Flesh of my Flesh

Portland's Guerrilla Productions wishes to congratulate Michael C. Smith and Liv Rainey on their engagement. Michael and Liv served as both extras and crew on the set of Flesh of my Flesh and it was during one of the most exciting shoots, The Great Zombie War, that Michael asked Liv to marry him. "There is nothing more heartwarming than two blood- and gore-covered people who love each other enough to make this kind of commitment in the middle of a zombie war," said Director Edward Martin III.

Liv and Sarah Mason met at a Bruce Campbell book signing in 2001, after which Sarah introduced Liv to several people at her Friday-night hangout. Mike said "After a couple years of living together, we began to discuss the idea of getting married.

Finally, in February of 2005, while shooting FOMF at an abandoned, dangerous, mazelike, poorly-lit, cold, damp, and allegedly haunted former mental hospital, I came to my senses and realized that none of this would have been possible if not for Liv. That's when I asked her to marry me."

The crew at Guerrilla Productions wishes the happy couple a prosperous, fun-filled, and cinematically sanguinary future.

Guerrilla Productions, fueled almost entirely by caffeine, released their first feature, The Dream-Quest of Unknown Kadath in October 2003 and has completed half a dozen short movies since. GP is currently in post-production on Flesh of my Flesh (www.FleshOfMyFlesh.com), a live action horror/thriller with Lovecraftian undertones and pre-production on a live-action adaptation of The Statement of Randolph Carter.

For more information, please contact

Edward Martin III
Guerrilla Productions
<http://www.Guerrilla-Productions.org/>
Edward@Guerrilla-Productions.org

